The Run-Up To The Punch Bowl: A Memoir Of The Korean War, 1951

Synopsis

The noted author and literary scholar, Samuel Hynes, has remarked that there has been no great book on the Korean War, a significant gap in American military letters. It may be hoped that this account will help to meet at least part of that challenge. This is a narrative of John Nolan's experience as a Marine rifle platoon leader in Korea in 1951, the pivotal year of the Korean War. Much of it reads like a journal, but it also includes the experiences of a half-dozen other Marine lieutenants fighting through the fog-shrouded mountains of the East-Central front during the year the war turned around. Individually, their heroism marked some of the top combat events of that time. Taken together, these accounts tell the story of fighting that year when the last Chinese offensive was stopped cold and the UN forces slugged their way back over the 38th parallel to the final line that exists today, more than a half century later. The lieutenants came from all over and were educated at the Naval Academy, Notre Dame, Miami University and College of the Pacific. As Marine rifle platoon leaders, they were all wounded, some several times, and abundantly decorated. And since Korea, their lives have spanned a broad range of experience. Charlie Cooper retired as Commanding General, Fleet Marine Force, Pacific; Joe Reed was a top executive at AT&T and later led the reorganization of Chicago's public schools; Jim Marsh left his enduring mark on the Marine Corps and the vast new USMC building at Quantico is named for him; Walter Murphy, a leading educator, author and novelist, was the McCormick Professor of Jurisprudence at Princeton; Bill Rockey had a distinguished Marine Corps career, as did his father before him; Eddie LeBaron was voted early into the College Football Hall of Fame and later led the NFL in passing during his years with the Washington Redskins and the Dallas Cowboys. John Nolan has practiced law in Washington, D.C. since shortly after returning from Korea. What People Are Saying "Great book! John Nolan has written a magnificent account of the Marines in action during the Korean War. It is a story about the Marine spirit and ethos. Every American should read this with pride in the Corps of Marines." General Anthony C. Zinni, USMC (Ret.) "It's a wonderful book. The writing is superb; it flows, it's moving, highly descriptive and strikes just the right tone - neither laconic nor emotional. Every Marine should read it." Haynes Johnson, Journalist, Author "This is a book about Marines, ordinary Americans who under unimaginable pressures do the extraordinary day after day. You will laugh. You will cry. And after reading John Nolan's memoir, you will have a far more profound understanding of the barbarity of war." Mark Shields, Columnist; Commentator, The NewsHour "John Nolan's timeless story of men in battle during the heavy fighting in Korea, 1951, bears all the marks of a classic - good men, hard men, decent men in brutal, near-constant combat. What they accomplished in those battles would be reflected later in their lives - those who kept them - as many would become highly successful in the Marine Corps and in other careers." Colonel John W. Ripley, USMC (Ret.) (The Bridge at Dong Ha) "John Nolan learned about leadership the hard way - leading a Marine rifle platoon in close combat in Korea. He is modest, honest and tough. And his memoir is a compelling read." Evan Thomas, Newsweek "If you don't know how a few good Marines helped prevent the Korean War from becoming the world's most dangerous war, then join Lt. John Nolan's 1st Platoon, Baker Co., 1stBn, 1st Marines, 1st MarDiv. The Run-Up to the Punch Bowl is a clear-eyed, gritty, rich day-by-day account of what makes Marines go up the hill." The Run-Up to the Punch Bowl is a fascinating memoir by John Nolan. His Naval Academy and Marine Corps Basic School training stood him in good stead as a platoon leader whose assignment took him to the "forgotten war" in Korea. When he signed up for the Marine Corps, an immediate combat assignment was pretty far from his mind, as the world was at peace following World War II. Less than a year after graduating from the U.S. Naval Academy at Annapolis, John found himself a newly married, graduate of a foreshortened Marine Corps Basic School course at Quantico, Virginia, boots on the ground in Korea. He devotes most of his memoir to the doings of the people he was serving with and little of his own accomplishments, which earned him a Silver Star, the Bronze Star with Combat "V" and the Purple Heart..I've known John, and his wife Joan, for more years than I like to remember. He's a fascinating gentleman who has many remarkable accomplishments in his life-time. His Marine Corps service in Korea is only a small part of his life but the main emphasis of this book. By writing this memoir, for posterity's sake, I'm glad he did it. While he's not a Stephan Ambrose, he tells it like it was, down and dirty, hungry and cold, wet and scared shiftless. Being there, he's a true hero of the greatest generation. I really enjoyed reading his book, having known the man. I wholeheartedly recommend this book to anyone interested in first person accounts of what it was really like trying to inspire a platoon of combat Marines to greater efforts while cold, wet, hungry, and in the mud with a lot of unfriendly North Korean and Chinese infantrymen trying making you keep your head (and other parts) down. This is a story of heroism in the face of enemy fire without heroics.
